REASONS TO RESTRUCTURE

The changing casino environment may call for changes in your organizational structure.

Your organization must have the right people employed in the right places for it to function effectively and profitably. In particular, the following symptoms may signal a need for organizational change:

Low employee morale

"Esprit de corps" is missing. Your staff's fears and anxieties about their jobs may be reflected in anger toward the company, resulting in low productivity.

High employee turnover

Continuous personnel changes result in increased training costs and low productivity, and management can't determine the cause.

High labor costs

Labor costs are creeping up faster than increases in revenue.

Inefficient operations

The company is unable to handle sudden growth resulting from increased demand for a product or service.

Poor internal communications

The owners/managers do not have timely access to data needed to manage the business. One department may not know the effect of its operations on other departments within the organization, or what financial commitments are made on its behalf.

Decreased profitability

Downward trends in profitability and key financial ratios require a review of the operations.

EVALUATE YOUR PRESENT PERFORMANCE AND CUSTOMER SERVICE

A review of your current business performance can provide you with insight on what changes need to be made. Through interviews, questionnaires and observation, CasinoPros can gather the data needed to evaluate your present organizational structure objectively.

To analyze your present business performance, consider the impact of:

- Company goals and objectives.
- Corporate culture.
- Day-to-day reporting and decision-making practices.
- Ownership structure and entity structure.
- Succession plans of owners/managers.
- Coordination of activities, lines of reporting and communication.
- Management information and reporting systems.
- Capabilities and limitations of management and key personnel.
- Staffing levels in relation to volume of activity.

Knowledge of your resources and the services produced by the casino is also imperative. CasinoPros is especially qualified to evaluate these areas because of their financial and business expertise.

A thorough investigation of your location will provide a clear picture of its strengths and weaknesses. Areas for improvement can only be identified after an objective evaluation of your company. Then, appropriate solutions and alternatives can be developed to strengthen your organization.

Here at CasinoPros will review how various elements of your business fit with one another and with the organization's environment. We can also review the effectiveness of your business and advise you on how it can be improved.

DESIGNING A NEW STRUCTURE

Designing the right structure for your organization's future requires an objective and coordinated review of present operations and needs. Additionally, knowledge of the company's operations and objectives, human relations principles, and management and marketing techniques is required to adopt the most effective organizational approach for your business.
